Carsharing start-up in Sao Paulo makes it an even 1000

When we completed a periodic cleanup of the World Carshare cities list to take out some redundancies this morning, we had it pared down to an even 999. Then the postman brought us this letter from . . . Sao Paulo.

100th Principal Voice message supporting World Streets

This is a day of big even numbers. The one hundredth World Streets Principal Voice comment came in from Mexico City today. The fact that it comes from a civil engineer with experience in a good range of economic and transportation situations makes it an all the more interesting read.

Lesson from Curitiba: To go slow you have to move fast

Former Mayor Jaime Lerner discusses how and why he made the first pedestrian street in the middle of downtown Curitiba. And in one second less than four minutes, he gives us a master class on how you get sustainable transport projects done.

Happy Birthday Vélib': Now you are two

Well here you are dear child, already two years old and for such a young thing you have certainly been very active over these first 730 days. And all that while learning to speak to your visitors in English, Spanish, German and Italian, as well as French. Quite an accomplishment for a two year old. But that's not all.

One thousand cities where you can carshare this morning

Think that the idea of a "shared car" is still a marginal phenomenon not ready for prime time and appealing to only a few ragged Greens here and there? Check out this listing to see where you can pick up a shared car this morning and drive it off to wherever it is you need to go in more than one thousand cities worldwide. Not so ragged, eh?

Message to COP15 Copenhagen: Think Sustainable Transport

The climate agenda is getting high political and media attention worldwide, and there are many shaping events scheduled for the months immediately ahead. That is good. But in our view the overall agenda for sustainable transport system reform at all levels is timid, incoherent and in large part irrelevant given the real priorities. Well, what is relevant then? How can we link new mobility and climate to get the level of innovation and reform that is critical in the years immediately ahead?

World Streets needs to do better

John Ernst, a long time sustainable transport colleague and ITDP Vice Director, Southeast Asia, writes that he finds World Streets pretty good value thus far, but he regrets that most of our content thus far seems to be focusing on what is going on within the advanced edge of the OECD region.

"The only good green vehicle is a shared green vehicle"

A recent article under the title : "Zipcar Launches All-Electric Car-Share Scheme" has set off an interesting exchange on a matter that is close to the heart of World Streets and one which we would like to share with you. And in turn invite your comments and discussion.

World Carshare: Lateral thinking anyone?

Below you will find our map reporting on the last eighty people dropping into the website this morning of the World Carshare Consortium which groups more than 450 people, organizations, companies, and agencies who together are defining the field. A pretty typical day in the carshare world.
